TO GAS CONSUMERS.

When we consider the material uses—the essential oil of petroleun, scarpely merchanishie for any other use—the fickness of the gas produced, requiring, when used as maphtha gas alone, to be diluted with forty-two percent, of air to reduce it to comething like the standard of gas (measured by candis-power) of the first Eurlish campet coal, the repidity, certainty, and, index project cleaning-bance, the economy with which it can be produced, is seen in gas manufacture, which should receive the attention of both practical and scientific men.

We have found it best to use this process in conjunction with the manufacture of oad gas dorous and disinfectant gas into the holder as to immediately overcutis any objections a to the quality of the gas throughout the city natoniy raking the Himminsting power to any given standard, but absorbing to a great exten the trage of sulphuretted hydrogen which always imparts a bad odor to the best cos This we do not ciaim as a discovery, but the experimental test of the use of pure maphths was most interesting and salisfactory. On the exenting of the 19th, about four o'clock, we had succeeded in getting ready for trying the effect on a large scale, of what is known in chemistry as gaseous diffusion, with-

The holders contained about 170,000 fact of gas, with a make of about fifteen to eighteen thousand feet per hour, when we commenced turning in the purenapaths gas trunning only two benches of 3s) and making at the rate of about eight thousand cubic feet per hour. The photometer (Sogge make, London, measured the coal gas in the mains at fourteen candle bower.

apprised at the increased brilliancy light.
Thus in twenty minutes the illuminating standard of coal gas, fourteen candle-power, was raised to eighteen.
By no other process known to modern and ence and practice can such results be produced so rapidly. In the ordinary manufacture of coal gas, complaints as to quality on the control only be remedied by a gradual process, while generally domes too late to meet complaint by this method alone is the effect immediately we can, therefore, assure the public if harafter any just complaints as to the file
